DRAFT

2011 22 February 1958

Dear 14/3/8

25X1

Thank you for your letter of 14 February transmitting message which I have discussed with the members of the Intelligence Advisory Committee.

25X1

With respect to the proposal in first paragraph, of an immediate meeting to seek to reach common conclusions, I doubt that a meeting such as proposed would achieve this. As you know, we have had an extremely full exchange of all relevant information. Our differences are primarily in one field and are based upon the most difficult issues of judgment, particularly concerning the degree to which the advent of long range missiles will affect the Soviet requirement for long range bombing strength. On this issue, the position taken by the US in the recent discussions was wholly consistent with the basic National Intelligence Estimates from which you will see that we ourselves are not yet of one mind on this subject. Those estimates were the product of an exhaustive consideration terminating in November and December. While they are under continuing review we have not recently received hard intelligence to add much to what we knew at that time.

I believe, however, that it might be helpful if designated representatives of your expert on the Soviet Air Force, were to come to Washington and brief the IAC members on the [] view concerning estimated present and future Soviet heavy bomber strength and other matters bearing on Soviet long range aviation.

25X1

Since our [] estimates on Soviet missile capabilities seem closely in accord, I do not feel that a similar briefing on missiles is so urgent. However, since all thinking on aircraft and missiles is so closely related, an insight into [] judgment on missiles might be a desirable part of the presentation.

25X1

With respect to the proposal in [] second paragraph, the procedure for intelligence support to NORAD is currently under review by the US Joint Chiefs of Staff, who of course exercise direct command responsibility in the US with respect to NORAD. Accordingly, I should like to defer a response on this question pending further consultation with the Joint Chiefs of Staff. As I have indicated the intelligence contribution [] of NORAD is consistent with the IAC national estimates.
